

Orthoptic exercises FAQ

This leaflet addresses the frequently asked questions (FAQ) regarding orthoptic exercises. If you have any further questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact 020 7188 4299, and leave a message on our answer phone.

Many people have a tendency to squint, which is controlled most of the time but may give headaches, blurred vision, double vision and eye strain symptoms. The exercises can help your eyes line up better and focus more quickly.

Sometimes exercises are given after eye surgery. The Orthoptist (a health professional trained in visual development and eye movement) supervises the exercises and will advise which exercise is appropriate. You will be seen regularly to monitor the success of treatment.

Should exercises make my eyes feel like they are pulling?

Often, particularly when exercises are first started, your eyes feel like they are pulling and symptoms may even seem worse. This is because you make your eye muscles work hard. This feeling often gets less as the eye muscles strengthen.

How often should I do the exercises?

Little and often!

Aim to do your exercises at least seven times a day. Split them up through the day. If you do your exercises before and after breakfast, lunch and supper then that is six times already! You do not need to do them for very long on each occasion. One minute of exercises followed by one minute of rest should be enough. You can rest your eyes by closing them or looking a long way out the window.

How long will it take for my eyes to feel better?

The Orthoptist will make an appointment to see the progress you are making. It depends how hard you work at the exercises but most patients are better within six to eight weeks.

The Orthoptist or Ophthalmologist (doctor trained in the diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of diseases of the eye and visual system) will be very pleased to answer any further questions you may have.
